Inside Trinity

POWERING
WHAT'S NEXT

*Marissa Siqueira,
Senior Manager of Talent Acquisition*

Every Trinity experience starts with a conversation. How we meet the moment in our communication matters. How the recruiter presents the role to a new candidate over the phone, how a manager is prepared to onboard and train a new hire, and how a Trinity employee shows up when they interact with homeowners all make a difference.

This issue explores how communication shows up in recruiting and onboarding, transforms a new teammate into a confident contributor, and how the homeowner experience reflects the culture we build internally.

EVERY INTERACTION MATTERS

From first impression to everyday excellence

The employee experience begins with Talent Acquisition. The way recruiters listen, communicate, and follow through sets the tone for everything that comes next. From there, every team member plays a role in shaping our culture.

Culture at Trinity isn't handed down from the top; it's lived in the small moments. When a team member acts with a service mindset, whether it's helping a homeowner understand their options or helping an employee resolve a tech issue, that example makes an impact. Teams are often strengthened after solving a problem together. Whether it's resolving a matter with a customer or finding a way to improve a process, challenges are inevitable – how we overcome them is what matters. And when an experienced resource steps in to help, it builds confidence among the team as a whole.

Here's what that looks like in action, in the words of Trinity employees themselves:

Craig Groenewold,
Senior Regional Manager, Traditional Sales

PUTTING THE CUSTOMER FIRST:

Outreach keeps homeowner interest in mind

"I've seen Dustin consistently put the customer first with real energy and integrity. He anticipates concerns, guides customers clearly, and always keeps their best interests in mind."

PROBLEM SOLVING LEADS TO IMPACT:

Operations improves productivity

"Amanda identified an issue with a process and implemented a solution that improved timelines and future errors, making a meaningful impact on overall team productivity and business performance."

A RELIABLE RESOURCE:

Resolving structural issues in the field

"Marie is always willing to jump in and help find a solution for any team needing assistance. She is reliably just a Teams call away and structural departments know they can depend on her for her knowledge and confidence in resolving an issue."

MAKING MOVES

How Trinity's recruiters turn strong candidates into lasting team members

Every year, before most departments have closed the books on the prior year, Trinity's recruiters are already looking ahead. They're reviewing headcount projections, identifying where gaps may emerge, and building candidate pipelines for roles that are still months away. By March, that early groundwork is in full swing with recruiters screening candidates weekly, coordinating interview panels, and connecting with top talent across the market.

But here's what makes the difference between filling a seat and hiring talent that stays: communication.

When a recruiter helps prepare a candidate for each conversation so they can show up confidently for the interview, it makes them feel supported and valued before they even accept an offer. When the job description, the conversations that follow, and the role itself are consistent, it builds employee trust.

Coordinating behind the scenes to gather and share information while simultaneously working directly with managers and candidates is essential to a smooth recruiting and onboarding experience.

A process that makes people feel like they already belong here is what turns a strong candidate into a Trinity hire, and a Trinity hire into Trinity team member a customer can count on.

The Onboarding & Training period is where the role comes to life in the eyes of the new hire. That first impression is critical in building long-term success. The Talent Acquisition team focuses on optimizing communication from initial contact through onboarding to strengthen that first impression. When a new hire feels informed going into their first day and the team is well prepared to onboard and train them, it makes a difference.

Trust starts at the kitchen table

Tony Roach,
Traditional Sales Rep

We had been considering solar for a while but had a lot of questions before moving forward. Meeting Trinity Solar made the decision much easier. They took the time to walk us through our current electric bill, explain exactly how the program works, and answered every question we had — without any pressure. From there, everything went smoothly.

Communication has been excellent throughout the process, and the installation itself was smooth and flawless. Overall, a really positive experience — we're very glad we made the switch with Trinity Solar.

PATTI H., WEST WAREHAM, MA
APRIL 2026

Positive customer experiences don't happen by accident. They reflect the people we hire and how they build trust using processes we have in place.

When a sales representative sits down with a homeowner and walks through their current electric bill, it transforms something unfamiliar into something tangible. Customers can see exactly where their money is going today and what it could look like with solar. That clarity builds confidence.

Patti's experience reflects what happens when that process is done right. The bill walkthrough isn't just a sales step — it's a trust-building moment. It gives customers the information they need to make a decision that's right for their family, on their own terms.

When customers feel supported from the very first conversation, everything that follows reflects that foundation.

- Established new community connections and generated early interest
- Engaged with a State Congressman, showcasing how Trinity supports local communities
- Received strong support from a local Board of Education, who offered to share the program with families across the district
